What this means in economics is that esports and traditional sports are not substitutes to each other from a consumption perspective. Therefore there will be no need for esports to steal consumers from traditional sports, reducing one of the huge potential obstacles to esports expansion. However this also means that esports will need to make conscious efforts to amass their own consumer base ...

Traditional approaches in sport economics correspond to a way of thinking, which we call a logic of sport product (Woratschek & Griebel, 2020). They acknowledge several special features of the sport product (Smith & Stewart, 1999, pp. 13-21) that impact how sport is managed. Figure 1 gives an overview of these features in sport economics. Figure 1: Special Features of the Product in Sport ...
